An Arrow 2 missile malfunctioned yesterday, secoods after a launch in the Mediterranean, prompting a decision to destroy it and abort the test. For the Arrow 2, it was the first setback after two successive tests in which it iotercepted its target ballistic missiles.

"A short while after its oormal takeoff, a failure developed in the missile," a Defense Ministry statement said. "It deviated from its coorse and the flight was interrupted."

The ministry said US and Israeli teams have investigated the cause of the failure. A defense source said the failure appears to have been in the cootrol box. The malfuoction caused the command and control station to lose cootrol of the missile. This is oot unusual," the source said. "It could bappeo in any test where so many complicated systems are employed." Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai agreed. "We believe in the Arrow system, and we will continue io the program's development and testing," he said. "I am expressing my deep appreciation to all of those who have worked on the development and manufacture of the Arrow."

Defense sources said the launch was meaot to test several subsystems, including the radar and its integration with the fire control system. They said most Arrow testing bas been completed and what remains is an examination of the fire cootrol and early warning radars.

The early warning radar, which detects enemy missiles at long distances, is being tested io simulation. The Arrow is a US-Israel project; its main contractor is Israel Aircraft lodustries. The fire control radar is being developed by IAI's Elta Electronics Industries and the fire control system by Tadiran.

The US has invested about $700 million in the project, and the success of the receot Arrow tests has led to interest by Japan, South Korea, Turkey, and Taiwan. A US anti-missile defeose project, the Theater High Altitude Air Defense [THAAD] system, bas sus-tained a series of test failures and its deployment date has been pushed back from 2002 to 2006. That has prompted US officials to take another look at Arrow. On June 25, US Rep. Curt Weldon, chairman of the House national security military research and development subcommit-tee, said the Peotagoo should explore the possibility of integratiog the Arrow in aoy US ballistic missile defcose program. In July, Defense News magazine called on the US to approve joint marketing and production of the Arrow 2. Defeose sources don't expect yesterday's failure to dampen enthusiasm for the Arrow. "We got over the hard part, which is proving that Arrow can intercept a target missile," one source said. "What we're now dealing with are the wrinkles that oeed to be ironed and a state of the state of the Defcose sources said they expect the next test will take place in early 1998. After the successful March lesi, officials said they were planning 10 begin emergeocy partial deployment of the Arrow by the end of next year. They could not say whether yesterday's failure would affect this,

Ben-Ami said the IDF did not support the South Lebanese Army shelling of Sidon earlier this week io response to the bombing in the Jezzine area that killed two Christian youngsters whose late father was an SLA commander. The new system for the administration of school trips will begin with the opening of the new school year, Education Ministry Director-General Benzion Dell said yester-

The reorganization of the system for school trips is a result of recommendations made by the Pressler Commission, established after the murder of seven Beit Shemesh schoolgirls at Naharayim on March 13.

Brig.-Gen. (res.) Meir Alon, who will head the Trips Administration that has been created in the ministry to determine policy, allocate resources, and set criteria regarding trips, said that the reforms include the establishment of a nationwide trips council to advise the administration; the creation of a situation room, which will answer questions regarding school trips 24 hours a day; and the doubling of the number of inspectors who check whether school trips are being property carried out.

Dell said the new plan is aimed at providing maximum security and safety for pupils and teaches going on school trips, and will allow for the trips to be closely monitored from the time they leave the school until the time they return.

US sub fails to find 'Dakar'

The US Navy research submarine NR-1 has ended its scan of the ocean floor for the missing Israeli submarine Dakar, and initial findings have turned up no trace of the wreckage, the IDF said yesterday. Since July, NR-1 has swept the Aegean Sea and the northern Sinai coast for signs of the Dakar, which went missing along with 69 sailors on its maiden voyage in 1968, The navy has spent untold millions in its 29-year search for the

THE CAIRO GENIZA SEMINAR

In 1896 at the Ben Ezra Synagogue in the Fustat area of old Cairo, Prof. Solomon Schechter of Cambridge University revealed to the world the staggering contents of its Geniza. 140,000 fragments were given to the Cambridge University for study. In the whole history of Judaic studies there has never been a more dramatic event than the discovery of these ancient documents. Poetry, prayers, accounts of journeys, files, tens of thousands of handwritten documents, some signed by the Rambam himself, and much more. A hundred years have passed and still not all the material has been studied. Now a selection on loan from Cambridge is on view in Jerusalem. It presents a vivid picture of the spiritual - and not so spiritual - mores and business dealings of a medieval Jewish community.

Shorashim and The Jerusalem Post Travel Club invite you to a weekend seminar with the experts, Prof. Stefan Reif, Head of the Archive, Cairo Cambridge University, and Prof. Mordechai Akiva Friedman, Jewish Culture in Moslem Lands and Cairo Geniza Studies, Tel Aviv University.

Matza likely to separate health, nursing insurance

by JUDY SIEGEL

Health Minister Yehoshua Matza has a "strong inclination" to give the four public health funds sole responsibility for supplementary health insurance and to permit only private insurance companies to offer oldage nursing insurance.

At present, all of the health funds are keen on supplying supplementary health insurance - services beyond the basket of health services - because such programs are very profitable. Some health funds supply these services directly to mem-bers today, while others have contracted private insurance companies to provide them.

Matza says that if he, in all likelihood, approves the separation scheme, each health fund will have to set up a separate non-profit organization and accounting system for supplementary health insurance operations. These would be supervised closely by the Health Ministry, Clalit) had approached him with the idea of launching a private health fund to compete on an equal basis with the four public ones. Matza said he would have to study the proposal and consult with ministry experts before considering it.

The health minister is working on a "conceptual revision" of ministry policy, and wants to turn it into a slimmed-down office that supervises and controls rather than provides services (through government hospitals) itself. He could not say for certain whether psychiatric services would be included in the basket of health services provided by the insurers starting January 1 (several years late), but hoped the deadline could

The Health Ministry must pay NIS 300,000 in damages to an AIDS victim because of a physician's negligence in informing her or the hos-pital administration she was HIV positive, Tel Aviv District Court ruled yesterday. The woman had sued the physician and the ministry. Judge Tzipora Baron said that Dr. Nurit Vardinon, head of the immunology laboratory at Tel Aviv's Ichilov Hospital, failed to try to locate the woman, a 28-year-old prostitute and drug addict, after she was tested for the disease in 1991. She also failed to notify the hospital administration that the woman had tested positive. The woman, who today lives in a hospice and is suffering from the final stages of the disease, discovered she was HIV positive in 1993, after returning to the hospital for the results of the test at the request of a drug treatment program to which she had applied Vardinon and the ministry contended that the woman only had given the hospital her name and ID number, and never had come to receive the test results or to leave other identifying information.

Deported war criminal may face charges in Australia

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN and news agencies

The Australian Federal Police plans to look at material used in the process that led Canada to deport Nazi war criminal Konrad Kales to determine whether he could face charges in Australia, Australian Ambassador Ian Wilcock said yesterday. Kalejs, an Australian citizen who was deported from Canada on Monday and arrived in Sydney resterday, served as an officer in the notorious Arajs Kommando, which played an active role in the murder of tens of thousands of Jews in Latvia, according to Efraim Zuroff, director of the Simon

Wiesenthal Center's Israel office, Wilcock explained that the police and the attorney-general's department now have responsibility for deciding what to do with Kalejs. The Australian Federal Police has an open file on his having allegedly committed war crimes," Wilcock said, "and the AFP has continued to review this maner in light of available evidence. It has sought access to material used in the Canadian depornation hearing, and is looking at it and negotiating to obtain further material. Once it is reviewed, it will be in a position to decide, in conjunction with other law enforcement agencies. whether any offense has been committed by Mr. Kalejs against Australian legislation."

Wilcock stressed that since Kalejs is an Australian citizen, he could not be denied entry, but that if he were to be convicted of a crime under Australian war crimes legislation, "deprivation of citizenship could be considered. We will have to see how it plays out, but it will be looked at very, very closely." However, Zuroff expressed doubts Kalejs would be prosecuted. "His case was previously investigated twice, so I am currently doubtful whether the political will currently exists in Canberra to prosecute Nazi war criminals for their crimes," he

"Not only wasn't Kalejs prosecuted previously, when the Australian government had the opportunity, but a fellow officer of the Arajs Kommando named Karlis Ozols, who was recommended for prosecution by the Australian Special Investigations Unit, was also not prosecuted because the attorneygeneral at that time closed down the SIU, and it was obvious that the government had no intention to pursue this matter further.

"That case was perhaps the strongest case against a Nazi living in Australia, and the failure to bring it to court was a clear-cut indication that the Australian government had no interest in doing so. If the arrival of Kalejs changes this, that would be a welcome development. I have my doubts."

MIL

Australian Jewish groups 'urged their government to take legal action against Kalejs. "If the Australian government decides that there is no legal reason to put Kalejs ou trial, it's a sign that we need to quickly change Australian law," Jeremy Jones, deputy head of the Executive Council of Australian Jewry said.

Wilcock said the AFP had briefed Australian Jewish leaders on the case.

Kalejs received Australian citizenship in 1957, before immigrating to the US.

olocaust claims

BONN - The German government and Jewish community representatives agreed yesterday to set up a special commission to examine how to deal with reparations claims from east European Holocaust victims.

Chancellery Minister Friedrich Bohl said the commission would have three months to reach its findings

Israel Singer, the head of a Jewish delegation which held talks with Bohl, thanked Bonn for its efforts and said he was pleased a mechanism had been to found to address the claims of Holocaust victims in eastern Europe.

They were twice victims - once of Nazism and the second time of Communism," said Singer, secretary general of the World Jewish Congress. "We saw to it today ... to make sure funds aside for them, this only amounted to a that they will not be a third time victimized." Bohl, however, made clear that the German government remained opposed to regular monthpayments to the eastern European Holocaust

VICTIONS. Germany has paid around 100 billion marks ($54.5b, at current rates) in compensation since World War II to victims of Nazi crimes and injustice, but Holocaust victims from the eastern bloc were excluded from payments during the Cold War. After the collapse of communism, lobby groups said east European victims were paid only a fraction of sums given to western victims and have demanded equal treatment.

They argued that even though Germany set maximum of 1,000 marks in one-off payments, while people living in Germany received about 500 marks a month.

Meanwhile, US Undersecretary of State Stuart Eizenstat has proposed that Swiss banks and other business that profited from World War II increase a fund already set up for Holocaust victims. Swiss firms and officials reacted coolly to the idea yesterday.

Eizenstat told Swiss television in an interview broadcast Tuesday night that firms should "substantially" increase the fund set up earlier this year by the three biggest Swiss banks. Some 270m. Swiss francs (about $70 m.) have been given or pledged to the fund. (News Agencies)

Celebs may nix LA's Israel 50th anniversary bash

By TOM TUGEND

LOS ANGELES - Actor Billy Crystal and a number of other Hollywood celebrities have, for the time being, declined to appear at a gala Los Angeles celebration of Israel's 50th anniversary.

The reluctance of the popular comedian and others to lend their talents to the event reflect the growing strains between large segments of the American Jewish community and Israel, centered on the legitimacy and treatment of non-Orthodox Jews in Israel

These growing strains became the focus last week of a small meeting between four Jewish VIPs and an Israeli diplomat, called originally to discuss local plans to mark Israel's 50th anniversary.

The meeting at the posh Hillcrest Country Club was held the same day that a large group of Conservative and Reform men and women, praying together at the Western Wall plaza on Tisha Be'av, were violently evicted by police.

In short order, the meeting's scheduled focus shifted as participants pointed to growing anger among American Jews about the conversion bill pending in the Knesset and previous attacks and perceived discrimination against Goldsmith acknowledg non-Orthodox Jews in Israel. The conversion bill would put into law the current practice of denying recognition to conversions performed in Israel by Reform and Conservative rabbis. The bill is seen by many American Jews as an attack on the legitimacy of their branches of Judaism.

Following the meeting, Yoram Ben-Ze'ev, Israel's consul-general in Los Angeles, filed what he considered a routine report on the discussion to the Foreign Ministry in Jerusalem. He also indicated that the strong feelings expressed at the meeting were symptomatic of a shifting relationship between Israel and American Jewry. Somewhat to his surprise. Ben-Ze'ev's dispatch was released by the Foreign Ministry to the Israeli media, and the story, with some embellishments, was widely reported in the press and on radio and tele-Vision.

The meeting with the consul-general was allended by four of the most influential Jews in Los Angeles.

They were Lew Wasserman, chairman emeritus of Universal Studios and still one of Hollywood's heaviest power hitters; Bram Goldsmith, chairman and CEO of City National Corp. and a former Jewish Federation Council president; the Federation's current president, Herbert Gelfand; and Federation executive vice president, John Fishel.

The outspoken Goldsmith said he expressed his feelings that the conversion bill and the incidents at the Western Wall were "an insult to every Jew." with an already noticeable impact on contributions by large givers

Goldsmith acknowledged that he himself was thinking of reducing his piedge.

PINK

Along similar lines, one of the participants cited the reluctance by Crystal, and three other Hollywood stars, to appear at the 50th anniversary celebration.

No additional information was available, since Crystal is away on location, Wasserman declined to comment, and Gelfand is in Israel. Ben-Ze'ev said in a later interview that he was surprised, but not altogether displeased, by the Foreign Ministry's release of his report.

The Israeli media, preoccupied with more pressing matters, has paid little attention to these issues so far, so some good may come of it," he said.

He noted that the Hillcrest meeting was by no means an isolated incident and that he had encountered much more heated emotions in every city he has visited in the eight Western states under his jurisdiction.

The matter goes beyond the current controversy." he said. "I think both Israel and world Jewry are on a genuine quest for a new identity. We need to redefine ourselves and find a broad common denominator to hold all Jews together."

Fishel said that while there exists a certain alienation from Israel among some Los Angeles Jews, part of this was due to misunderstandings of the actual situation in Israel.

The gala celebration of Israel's independence is slated for April 15 at the Shrine Auditorium and will be the highlight in Los Angeles of the year's anniversary events. Fishel said that negotiations were under way to have the event relecast by a major American network.

NATO circles Bosnia police stations

By DAN DE LUCE

BANJA LUKA, Bosnia, (Reuters) - Heavily-armed NATO troops surrounded police stations in the Bosnian town of Banja Luka on Wednesday to back Bosnian Serb President Biljana Playsic in her bid to assert authority over her hardline rivals.

About 350 British and Czech troops in armoured vehicles rolled down the streets of Banja Luka at 6:30 a.m. (0430 GMT) and deployed around four police stations and a police academy, the NATO-led Stabilisation Force (SFOR) said. "SFOR met no resistance, SFOR is in control...We have deployed sufficient resources to meet any anticipated requirements," spokesman Major John Blakeley told reporters in Sarajevo.

The extraordinary action was taken on "mutual agreement" between Western envoys and Plavsic who met late on Tuesday to discuss the increasingly tense power struggle, the office of the High Representative to Bosnia, Carlos Westendorp, said.

Playsic has been fighting for months to gain control over the security apparatus run by hardliners loyal to ex-president and indicted war criminal Radovan Karadzic.

A1 midday, Playsic paid a tri-umphant visit to the main police station in Banja Luka where her newly-appointed commanders assumed their posts.

International Police Task Force (IPTF) officers earlier entered the police stations and found large quantities of unauthorised weapons including machineguns, rocket launchers and mines, IPTF deputy commander Werner Schum told reporters.

NATO had to bring in extra trucks to cart away all the weapons seized at the police stations. Western officials said the arms caches indicated that hardline police may have been preparing to strike back at Plavsic. The NATO operation was probably launched to pre-empt such an attack, they said. With Banja Luka now firmly under Playsic's authority, interna-tional police officers hinted that similiar operations would be conducted clsewhere in Bosnia's Serb republic.

U.S. cnvoy Robert Gelbard, NATO officers and the international High Representative to Bosnia, Carlos Westendorp, held crisis talks on Tuesday night with Plavsic.

Playsic's special police units seized control of the main police station in Banja Luka on Sunday to uncover what they said was evidence of widespread telephone tapping. NATO later sent in troops to prevent a clash between Playsic's supporters and police loyal to Karadzic. Westendorp's office said rival police were using the building to mount an elaborate eavesdropping operation against Plavsic and other prominent figures in Banja Luka. International police found hundreds of tapes and wiretapping equipment in the station

Playsic dissolved the Bosnian Serb parliament and called early elections last month after hardline opponents rejected her demand to suspend the interior minister, Dragan Kijac, a staunch Karadzic loyalist.

Playsic has broken with fellow nationalists and accused them of running smuggling rackets and damaging Serb interests by sabotaging efforts to enforce a peace treaty. By trying to counter Plavsic, Karadzic has attracted attention to himself and sparked calls for his arrest and extradition to face charges before the U.N. war crimes tribunal in The Hague.

NATO has said it will not tolerate Karadzic wielding influence behind the scenes indefinitely and hinted he might be snatched at some point.

Tuesday. Mir, which was launched in 1986, is the last element left from the glories of the Soviet space programme, which was the first to launch a satellite and then a man into orbit.

On June 25 the station experienced the worst accident in its history when it was in collision with its supply ship, and it has suffered a series of smaller failures in recent weeks.

"In principal we are deciding three problems: to create a (new) station, support Mir until a certain time, that is until the (new) station goes into orbit, and somewhat change the space complex now in orbit," Petrov said,

Russia is participating in creation of an international space station, the first segment of which is scheduled for a June 1998 launch.

Space officials have said they intend to keep Mir in orbit at least until the year 2000, and leading Russian policymakers have not previously advocated its retirement. If and when Mir is abandoned, it will eventually fall to earth.

The question of the station's support or removal is a state issue that witt be decided by the gov-emment, and not by Petrov," said government spokesman Alexander Voznesensky. "The Alexander voznesensky. The information I have says continued support was planned." Vatery Ryumin, who heads Russia's cooperation with NASA on Mir, added: "A buteaucrat (Petrov) can say whatever nonsense he wants.] don't even want to hear this nonsense." Deputy Prime Minister Yakov Urinson lold reporters earlicr this month Mir financing would continue next year.

The 1997 budget and the 1998 budget will provide for the necessary means to finance the Russian space programme and work on the Mir orbital station," he said.

Russian space officials on Wednesday could not provide exact figures on the cost of operating Mir and ontside observers say Russian military control of some aspects of the programme make it hard to calculate.

Foreign governments, and espe-cially the United States, have supported a large part of the station's cost in recent years.

The U.S. agreed to pay Russia $478 million, mostly for Mir-related activities, under a December 1993 agreement to last until 1998. The European Space Agency (ESA) paid $50 million for two joint missions involving Mir in 1994 and 1995, according to Alain Fournier-Sicre, head of the ESA mission to Russia.

He said he had spoken to a top Russian space official on Wednesday who did not anticipate a struggle for 1998 funding.

Explosion at French silo buries up to 12

PARIS (Reuters) - An explosion at the main grain silo in the French city of Blaye will shut down grain exports from the southwestern port for several months, creating logistical problems for operators, grain industry officials said yesterday. The explosion, which caused a blaze and buried up to 12 people under tons of grain and con-. crete, occurred at about 8:15 GMT in a silo owned by grains storage firm SEMABLA in the port of Blaye, on the Gironde River, about 50 km. north of Bordeaux.

The explosion may have been due to a build-up of static electricity and dust, officials said. The silo, with a capacity of 54,000 tons, was two-thirds destroyed.

A SEMABLA official said it was premature to discuss the loss involved, saying the group had just sent its own experts to the site.

The explosion was expected to have heavy economic consequences for the port of Blaye as the silo handled the bulk of its grain trade, which in turn makes up some 90 percent of the port business.

"This will have severe consequences for the port as grain

"While this may seem like pie in the sky minking to many Americans, I believe that I and my colleagues... have gathered enough scientific data and cross-cultural comparisons to suggest that this type of effort may eventually pay off.

In 1974, the APA joined several other national organizations in passing resolutions against corporal punishment in schools. Since then, 27 states have banned school paddling.

In the early '70s, efforts to revoke corporal punishment in schools were considered bold, said Hyman, author of The Case Against Spanking.

"[It] was considered by so many to be so controversial and out of sync with the public's beliefs," he said. Clearly, attitudes have shifted significantly regarding corporal punishment in schools, with only a large bloc of Southern states refusing to enact state laws. And studies show that fewer parents than before think spanking at home is a good idea. According to psychologist Murray Straus, of the University of New Hampshire, 94 percent of Americans surveyed in 1968 thought it was sometimes necessary to give a child "a good spanking." But only 67 percent agreed with that statement in a 1995 survey.

Two-thirds of Americans still agree with that. But in a historical perspective, that is still a lightning-fast change from 1968. We're in a state of transition to a more humane method of child rearing," Straus said.

Nevertheless, it is far from certain that Americans are heeding the advice from experts who are increasingly saying "spare the rod." Spanking is commonplace in many American homes, even though there is evidence that parents are deeply conflicted about it, experts say.

dren who are spunked have higher rates of behavioral problems and are Even a 1994 survey of psycholo-gists found that while 75% of the respondents opposed spanking and 55% believed it to be an abusive act, 48% reported having spanked their lowed the children into adulthood and Council. The council, whose duties include the commitment of peacekeepers around the world, has 15 members. Five states, the victors of World War II, are permanent members with veto power. The 10 non-permanent members represent different regions of the world for two-year terms.

US Ambassador Bill Richardson has proposed that five new permanent members be added: Germany, Japan, and three unspecified nations representing the developing world.

It seems to be a given that the council will expand. "Enlargement is long overdue," The New York Times said in an editorial last week. The only questions appear to be who will get the new seats and whether new permanent members will have a veto.

However, enlargement without reform is premature. Before there is any initiative to increase the council, one ought to question why all member states have not had an equal chance to hold one of the non-permanent seats in the old chamber.

Israel, in this instance, is unique. It is the only opportunity to rectify this injustice.

The international community is grappling state that has been excluded from the regional with how to expand the UN Security groups. These groups select candidates to represent a geographic area in the Security Council and in other UN organs.

Israel's natural geographic affiliation would place it in the Arab group, which, in turn, is part of the larger Asian group. A state, however, cannot join the group without the consent of all its members. The Arab states will not admit Israel.

In the meantime, Israel wants to become a temporary member of the "Western European and Others" group. The "others" are Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. The US Foreign Policy Reform Act, which is being considered by the US Congress, calls on the State Department to promote full equality for Israel at the UN by encouraging the "Western Europe and Others" group to admit Israel.

There is something structurally wrong with an organization that allows the systematic and decades-long discrimination against one of its member states, while its charter calls for the universality of UN membership. The expansion of the Security Council provides a compelling ver since he supposedly stepped down from leadership of the Bosnian Serbs after being judged unfit to hold office by NATO, Radovan Karadzic has continued to wield ever more subversive power.

His defiance of international law has become daily more arrogant. At last, and not before time, NATO acted yesterday to thwart his scheming by dismantling checkpoints set up by his loyalists at Banja Luka. As if Bosnia is not already divided enough, the Serb sector of the dissected country is itself now split in two. There is an open power struggle between the ultra-hardline military center at Pale and the civilian power center of President Biljana Playsic at Banja Luka. Playsic controls Banja Luka and the northwest, Karadzic Pale and eastem Bosnia. Karadzic's seizure of the police station at Banja Luka last week was a cheeky foray into Plavsic territory - yet another exercise in what the Americans call Karadzic's anti-demo-cratic subversion. By thwarting Karadzic's underhand bid to oust Plavsic, NATO peacekeepers (or rather, their political leaders) have thrown their weight behind the president for the first time. Plavsic was once though to be scarcely less hardline than the blood-and-iron types at Pale. But she has shown a commendable ability to stand up for the Dayton peace accords and move on from wartime rhetoric to realpolitik. Because of that, the Western power brokers are right to back her as the only acceptable leader of Serbian Bosnia. The United Nations police found ample evidence of Karadzic's subversion in the raided police station - arms, 500 tape recordings of Playsic's conversations, and documents pointing to intimidation of judges of the Constitutional Court. They allegedly were forced to rule against Plavsic's decision to call new elections to replace the pro-Karadzic Bosnian-Serb assembly.

This is evidence not of irregularity, or of political rivalries, but of criminal activity: Since Karadzic and his top cronies already stand officially accused of heinous war crimes, it is clear they no longer have any idea of the difference between criminality and normality if they ever did.

NATO forces have shown increasing impatience with the lack of prosecutions of those indicted of war crimes. They have now decided to

The young Border Policemen were having a wild time. They were punching Gazan cah drivers for parking where they shouldn't, smashing their hoods with hilly clubs, ripping their antennas off.

They called over a Palestinian sitting at a bus stop, and, when he got close enough, slammed the door of their jecp in his face. They strutted around, slapping their billy clubs against their thighs, livid with aggression, scaring the hell out of passersby.

After seeing this on my first day of reserve duty in Gaza in 1990, I remarked to some of my fellow reservists, mostly middle-aged men like myself, that the Border Policemen seemed a little over-enthusiastic about their work.

The consensus opinion in my unit, though, was that this was a dirty job that had to be done. "Look," one soldier explained, "it's rough over here. If you don't make the Palestinians fear you, they'll kill you. Now I'm not going to do it, you're not going to do it, but somebody has to do it, and that's what they have the Border Police for.'

At first I thought this was a pretty callous attitude. In time, though, I realized they were right. As the saying goes, there's no such thing as a humane occupation.

We can't go into Gaza or the West Bank and be firm but fair. We can't tell the Palestinians, "Now you treat us with respect, and we'll treat you with intervene in what some might regard as an internal affair, but is in reality necessary action in support of the 1995 Dayton Agreement, and against those trying to subvert it. The peacekeepers should now measure up to the undoubtedly tough task of going all out after Karadzic to deliver him and his lieutenants to The Hague to face the inevitable judgment of the world. In Banja Luka yesterday, NATO adopted a much-needed tougher profile. Now it should finish the job.

They mean to run us out of their country. And if we intend to stay there, we've got to show them right up front who's boss, and remind them of it regularly. Otherwise they'll trample us.

Sir, - I am writing in reference to Judy Siegel's article of July 29 concerning the high rate of anemia in Jerusalem babies.

Once again, the Ministry of Health is trying to put a band-aid on the problem of infant health by recommending vitamins and iron supplements. The authorities have yet to understand the importance of actively supporting breastfeeding which is the cheapest, easiest and by far the best way of preventing illness. It is especially important to have qualified lactation consultants or nurses work with populations at risk. Special programs in Third World countries and developed ones (such as WIC in the US) have proven very effective in raising the oreastfeeding rates.

I must take exception to the recommendation to routinely supplement fully breastfed babies with iron and vitamins. Breast milk has a small amount of iron compared to formulas or infant cereals, but it is well absorbed by the body. Human milk has everything necessary to fully nourish a baby for at least the first half year of life. It is very rare to see a totally breastfed anemic baby.

B'tselem detailed a dozen cases of "heatings, degradation and serious abuse" of Palestinians by Border Police in just the last three months.

The families and friends of the two convicted policemen, ages 19 and 20, were furious over the eight-month sentence they each received. These boys defended Israel, and Israel throws them to the dogs, their supporters shouted in court. "My son is the true victim," said one of the fathers.

Maybe he has a point. Israel can talk all it wants about "purity of arms," but you don't keep the Palestinians down for 30 years with purity of arms. You've got to use indelicate measures, and for this you need indelicate recruits, which is where the Border Police comes in.

As a rule, they are not b'nei tovim - sons of the elite. Not college-bound paratroopers from Rehavia, not sandy-haired kibhutz pilots.

They are, in the main, sons of the Israeli underclass - poor or working-class Sephardim, badly educated, brought up on authoritarian rules, in neighborhoods where violence and hatred of Arabs is common, where a lot of people carry around loads of resentment.

Is it any surprise, then, when the boys let off some steam on a bunch of sorry Palestinian bricklayers? They might have been bred for this kind of thing.

Referring to the worldrenowned video showing the two Border Police defendants whaling away at their captives, the judge said, "One sees before one's eyes the malice and cruelty that threaten to swallow up all that is good in our society. It cannot be denied that these acts and similar ones are on the increase, and the mind and heart refuse to believe what the eye sees."

Oh, believe it, judge. This is how we won the West Bank, and IC the extent that we want to keep our winnings, we'll need to use plenty more malice and cruelty. And we've got the right boys for the job.

Look, somebody has to do it.

ONE HELL OF A GAMBLE: Khrushchev, Castro, and Kennedy, 1958-1964 by Aleksandr Fursenko and Timothy Naftali. New York, W.W. Norton. 420pp. $27.50.

By John Newhouse

The Cuban missile crisis was the climax of the Cold War's truly perilous time, the years 1960 through 1962, when each superpower felt itself being relentlessly tested by the other. The story of that brief confrontation has been steadily enriched by a procession of declassified American documents as well as by memoirs. Until now, however, we haven't had a good up-close look at large and vital parts of the drama: the thinking and motives of the Soviet leader, Nikita Khrushchev; the interplay between Moscow and Havana; the degree of risk that the Kremlin was willing to run in order to secure its foothold in the Caribbean.

This detailed account may oot altogether fill the gap, but it comes fairly close. One Hell of a Gamble was written by Aleksandr Fursenko, a Russian historian, and Timothy Naftali, an American who teaches history at Yale. They were granted exclusive permission to review Khrushchev's papers; they were also able to draw on archival material from other official Soviet sources, including the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Central Committee, the Armed Forces General Staff and the GRU (military intelligence).

The episodic drama begins with the flirtation of the Castro brothers, Fidel and Raul, with Moscow after they seized power at the start of 1959. (In Raul's case the flirting started even earlier, he, unlike his opportunistic brother, was a convinced Communist.) The story then moves stage by stage, mini-crisis after mini-crisis, to the fateful 13 days churing which the people most frightened were almost certainly the ones in Washington and Moscow who were trying to defuse the crisis. It was never in the cards that Khrushchev would fight for cuba, where he was playing a very weak hand, But Washington could not be sure of that, let alone make that assumption.

The anthors shift the scene continually from Washington to Moscow and Havana - among the political leaders and their advisers, intelligence agents and their principals, military chiefs and their bosses. The story takes on the elements of great theater as it moves to its denouement.

We find Khrushchev, a frustrated high roller, looking for some way to offset America's heavy edge in long-range ouclear weapons. "Why not throw a hedgehog at Uncle Sam's pants?" he said to Rodion Malinovsky, the defense minister. Sometime in April 1962, about six months before the crisis, be had begun to think about putting offensive missile systems into Cuba, and a month later held a meeting of his senior minis-presented with a fait accompli, which meant executing the bold deed in immaculate secrecy. Yet the missiles couldn't be hidden from American U-2 aircraft that were then conducting surveillance flights over Cuba. Over the outspoken advice of some military officers. Fursenko and Naftali say, Khrushchev and Malinovsky "clung to the thesis that US intelligence would oot detect the missiles until it was too late to do anything about them."

To learn, moreover, that Soviet intel-Johnny Prokov, thought he overheard ligence resembled the gang that couldthem say that Donovan would fly south that very night "to cover the operation to capture Cuba, which is expected to start n't shoot straight is sobering indeed, given the stakes. The book cites an Soviet intelligence as "a well-placed source in the US national security bureaucracy" - as reporting that "the nuge Soviet auclear lests in the fail of 1961 had deterred the United States from proceeding with plans to launch a preemptive nuclear strike on the Soviet Union." This, the authors say, probably "strengthened Khrushchev's tendency to believe that nuclear weapons were the only language that the United States understood." But the report makes no sense, as the authors should have said. Any incentive Washington might have had to launch such an attack would have been strengthened, not weakened. by tests aimed at improving Soviet missile systems.

are described as telling the KGB that "Turkey was one of a number of NATO countries that would eventually be receiving US Polaris submarines." Washington never provided Polaris submarines to Turkey or any other country, and never intended to. The source for this statement may have been KGB files, but the authors should have known better than to take it at face value.

Fursenko and Naftali treat superficially the most haunting question of the crisis: Did Knrasnchev give his commander on the scene, Gen. Issa Pliyev, discretionary authority to use shortrange nuclear missiles against an American invasion force? The question first arose five years ago when Gen. Anatoly I. Griokov, an unreconstructed hard-liner, put it about that Khrushchev had delegated this authority to Pliyev. Unfortunately, his remarkable assertion gained wide acceptance, although a few people did argue vigorously that Kinusinchev would sever have been so reckiess as it allow some subordinate to stari : nuclear war.

The book drafts back and forth on this issue, at one point noting that an order giving Pliyev the authority was never approved. Then, in describing the last stage of the crisis, Fursenko and Naftali report that the Presidium was ready to give him the authority.

What isn't cited is Gribkov's turnabout. In a book he wrote with William Y. Smith, an American general who was also involved in the crisis, a cable from Malinovsky, dated October 27, is quoted and makes it clear that none of the canable

FROM FALASHA TO FREEDOM: An Ethiopian Jew's Journey to Jerusalem hy Shmuel Yilma, Jerusalem, Gefen Publishing House, 112 pp. NIS 40.

By Lynn Poritz

t Shmuel Yilma's Pessah seder, after the story of liberation is told, he gives a far more personal recounting of a journey to Israel that began, when he was 11 years old, with his exodus from Ethiopia. Cut off from their roots for 2,000 years, thousands of Ethiopian Jcws defied death in the form of contending military forces, maranding bands of thieves, wild animals, and the scorching sun and desert, in order to get to Israel.

Shmuel's book is dedicated to those Ethiopian Jews "who never reached the Promised Land." His story begins in 1980 in the small Jewish farming village of Adi-Worewa, where his family lived in a straw house on the banks of the Tekeze River. The villagers' animals grazed in the nearby fields, and their children splashed in the stream and walked five kilometers to an ORT school, which had been set up by Shmuel's uncle Feredeh. But it was hardly a peaceful. pastoral environment. The village was also a battleground between the Communist Dergi Mengista regime and the Tigrei Patriotic Liberation Front. Bloated corpses in the valley attested to the brutality. Upon threat of death by the TPLF forces, Fereden escaped to the Sudan, where he prepared to lead his Jewish brethren to Israel. That journey began for Shmuel and 15 mem-bers of his family one night when they just walked away from their ancestral village, telling no one of their destination. Thus began a 500-kilometer, grueling journey, walking at night and sleeping during the day when the sun was at its most ferocious. They hid out in forests from bandits, soldiers, and government informers. Jeering hyenas seemed intent on ripping them and their beasts of burden to

Steep slopes made camping almost impos-sible and a donkey and a horse fell to their deaths, but the group trudged on. One day they walked for 22 hours nonstop, while the desert became more inferno-like with each step they took. On a particularly dry stretch of the Khmora-Gondar road, a confused guide claimed a lake was nearby, but the thirsty travelers found only a dried riverbed moistened with monkey urine. Butter was fed to almost dehydrated children, who began imagining a deluge. Just as their lives seemed close to extinction, they were directed by Sudanese traders to the Sherif Kamad Wadi, three hours away. At the wadi, the almost desiccated wanderers dug deep and finally drew out water. Their lives were saved again by a Sudanese Moslem beekeeper, who warned them of

Dergi patrols at the frontier and guided them away from a truckload of soldiers. Following the course of the Nile, known locally as Behar Salam (The Sea of Peace), and the frontier of Sudan and Ethiopia, the group survived an onslaught of raging wind and rain and wild charging animals. Bandits appeared, but decided the bedraggied group was too poor to bother with. There was more trouble for them in Sudan sickness from polluted water, hiding in sacks and being stacked like bags of potatoes onto a truck bound for Gedariff so as to avoid Sudanese locals intent on turning them over to the Ethiopians. Their desperation is evoked in Shmuel's words: "We suffered more on that truck journey than on the whole journey on foot."

From Gedariff to Khartourn, the affliction was mainly psychological, with ubiquitous police arousing the fear of a return to Ethiopia. But the group persevered. They changed names and clothes and were flown from Khartoum to Athens. Upon escaping Sudan, Shmuel's father asked: "Who can stand against the Will of He who sits io the Heavens?"

Sadly, in the "Promised Land," absorption has been less than perfect, with comparative poverty and the forced ritual conversion of people who risked their lives for their ancient beliefs. They have also had to contend with obnoxious paternalism, and the collective insult of blood banks throwing away donated Ethiopian blood because of fear of HIV contamination. On top of it all there has been confusion and intolerance. Shmuel's family were sent to trailer homes in Ofakim, where he was offered a kippa. "Since when am I a Moslem?" he asked indignantly.

But Shmuel's story is basically one of success. "Falasba" is defined as a stranger, a landless one. He is neither. He defines himself as the second Ethiopian to be an officer and win the Commander-in-Chief's Prize. He is now deputy director of the Association for the Advancement of Ethiopian Immigrants.

A particularly poignant section was written by Zeneveb G'day, who also arrived here on Operation Moses: "I felt that I was walking into a void and would never see my mother and father again. But the hope of actually standing on the soil of the Land of Zion and Jerusalem gave us the strength and the will to bear all that." His pareots reached Israel in 1981 after a year-and-a-half in Sudan, where they had buried his nine-year-old sister, who "died from hunger and disease."

Sadly, while this story of Jewish faith is powerful, dramatic and inspirational, the translation and editing are terrible. A story of the return of a people from exile, the culmination of a 2,000-year-old dream, a journey of struggle and liberation, deserves a translation and editing job that matches the conviction and sacrifice that went into this exodus. This is not it.

Andrei Gromyko, the foreign minister, had the feeling, the authors say, that "Khrushchev was merely consulting them about a decision to which he was already firmly committed."

idea - althou

On the following day, Khrushchev was giving his defense council the strategic spin: "In addition to protecting Cuba, our missiles would have equalized what the West likes to call 'the balance of power," he said. "The Americans have surrounded our country with military bases and threatened us with nuclear wcapons, and now they will learn just what it feels like to have enemy missiles pointing at you."

Elsewhere, Khrushchev stressed that President John F. Kennedy had to be

"Hc will do what he says he will do." Rogers, the authors write, had unwittingly become "the KGB's best indicator of Kennedy's intentions ... the star of Khrushchey's intelligence folder." systems in including the short-range missiles, could be used "without authorizatioo from Mos. cw."

it is important to have this question of pre-authorization disposed of. Toe missile crisis should be remembered for what it was: an act of breathtaking folly by one side followed by largely sensible and restrained behavior by both sides. Later, there was talk of crisis management. But something else chance, good luck - was also involved. Not even the exercise of restraint and sensible behavior can be relied on to "manage" a crisis once it is under way and leadership is struggling to keep control.

The current government has adopted the recommendations of an expert team, filed during the previous government's term, that the inflow of foreign workers be stenimed.

The new policy aims to reverse the trend which developed during the 1990's, whereby jobs which had been performed by Palestinians were gradually assumed by foreign workers from dozens of countries. particularly in the farming and construction sectors.

Until the late 1980s some 150,000 Palestinians used to work daily in Israel. Since then at least 200,000 foreign workers are estimated to have arrived in Israel. The demand for the foreign workers arose following nationalist vioience, which generated a reluc-tance to hire Patestimans, and recurring closures, which made their availability uncertain.

Trade and services' revenue growth up 1%

The rate of growth in revenue from trade and services slowed to 11 percent in the second quarter of 1997, compared to 31% in the first quarter of the year, the Central Bureau of Statistics reported yesterday. The growth rate dropped from 2.3% per month on average in the first three months of the year to 1% per month. In the food and hospitality sector, growth in revenues between the first and second quarters of 1997 dropped from 28% to 10%: in the retail sector, growth fell from 24% to 6%; and in wholesale growth, revenues dropped to 11% in the second quarter of Jennifer Friedin 1997.

A UPS driver heads out for a delivery now that the Teamsters' strike is over.

UPS faces new threat from pilots

By HOWARD S. ABRAMSON

NEW YORK (Bloomberg) - United Parcel Service of America, having settled a crip-pling 15-day strike with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, faces a contract fight with the 2,000 pilots who fly the company's planes.

UPS' negotiations with the Independent Pilots Association were suspended in June when a federal mediotor decided the world's biggest package delivery company and the union were too far apart on wages and benefits. Now that UPS settled the Teamsters' strike - giving in to most of the union's demands - the pilots want to go back to the bargaining table. Talks are expected to begin next month and the pilots are confident UPS will give in, rather than face another walkout. "We're anxious to get our negotiations going again," said Robert Miller, president of the pilots union. "I don't feel UPS wants another strike. So I believe it should be easier for us" to negotiate a new contract. "We are ready" to resume talks, UPS Chairman James Kelly said at a press conference vesterday. The pilots supported the Teamsters during the strike, refusing to cross pickets. Teamster President Ron Carey has vowed to return the favor should the pilots walk out.

"I've totally commined the resources of this union to make sure they [the pilots] get a comprehensive settlement," Carey said at a press conference yesterday.

The pilots are covered by the Railway Labor Act that governs the railroad and aviation industries. The law makes it difficult for strikes to occur, encouraging compromises between unions and their employers. In recent years, presidents have been more willing to order strikers back to their jobs under the Railway Labor Act than under the Taft-Hartley Act, which governs most industries. The last two US railroad strikes have lasted two days or less before the White House intervened. President Bill Clinton rejected calls from UPS and other business interests to intervene in the Teamster strike, saying that the disruption didn't meet the threshold set in Taft-Hartley, namely a national emer-

While UPS moves about 80 percent of the domestic ground parcels in the US, it is second to Federal Express Corp. in the air express package delivery market. UPS has been focusing on the air business, much of which is international, in recent years, going head-to-head with FedEx. UPS said it moved . an average of 1.6 million parcels a day by air and 10.4 million by ground in 1996. Miller said the union wants pilot salaries to reach the industry average. He said UPS' pilots make 25% less than FedEx's, and 30% less than the industry average.

UPS began its air operations in 1988 and the pilots were originally members of the Teamsters, Miller said. In 1990 they formed the IPA and left the Teamsters.

PARIS (Reuters) - France's Socialist-led government launched an ambitious plan yesterday to create 350,000 jobs for young people over the next three years, making good on a campaign pledge that helped it wrest power from the conservatives. SOTHEBY'S NEW YORK sold coins and medals for nearly $2. million at an auction last month. One of the curiosities was a gold medal presented by survivors of the Titanic to the Fifth Officer of the Cunard liner RMS Carpathia, the ship that rescued them. Dated 1912, the medal more than doubled its estimate to go for $55,000. In April 1912, within 24 hours of being picked up by the Carpathia, a committee of First and Second Class passengers among the 705 survivors amassed a fund to provide relief for destitute steerage passengers and to have a joving cup made for Carpathia's capiain, as well as medals for officers and crew. These were presented six weeks later at a ceremony on board the Carpathia.

The gold medal sold now was presented to Fifth Officer Gustav J. Rath, a Hungarian officer serving as liaison between Cunard and emigrants from Hungary, as well as a crew of Austro-Hungarian origin; who made up nearly half the ship's complement. Cunard had a monopoly on Hungarian emigration.

TWO BEAUTIFUL woodblock

Where dreams become virtual reality

Local start-up RT-Set is garnering international clients with computer-generated technology that can transform an empty television studio into a lively, imaginative set little boy teeters on a thin walkway as missiles are hurtled at him from A out of nowhere. He inches forward slowly, trying not to look down at the boiling magma below his feet. He moves a little further, then further still, and then, whoops! He loses his balances, plunges into the chasm below and a burst of flame engulfs his body.

By NICKY BLACKBURN

Of course none of this is real. Not the missiles, the magma, the chasm, nor the flame, About the only thing that is real is the boy. This is virtual TV. Anything goes. One minute you can be in a haunted castle, the next the Taj Mahal, the next - well the list is as endless as your imagination. You can fly, you can swim, appear or disappear and all the time you're really only standing in one spot in a bare studio.

RT-Set, a specialist in virtual studio systems and a subsidiary of BVR Technologies, was founded just three years ago. It has already carried out projects with a number of leading international players such as Disney and CBS. II covered the US and Korean presidential elections and Mexico's elections. While sales of the system are only expected to begin this year, the company predicts sales of over $50 million a year by the turn of the century.

Essentially a virtual studio is an add-on to existing TV studios. It enables producers and video makers to transform what is in reality a small, propless set into a lively and imaginative computer-generated setting on screen. Presenters may walk about in a bare set, but viewers see them in a proper three-dimensional environment surrounded by props. And, unlike shows that involve computer graphics today, shooting can be done in realtime and there is no need for post production processes

"One thing that unfortunately hasn't become digital or computerized in TV stations and production houses is set building," says Shalom Nachshon, 45, president and CEO of RT-Set. "It's an expensive business and studios spend large amounts of time and labor on set construction and maintenance. You also need big warehouses and costly tools to move sets from place to place." At some studios, sei budgets can average $1m. a year.

"The virtual studio eliminates the need for props or sets because the computer creates them. You just load in what set you want, whether it's for the news or a game show, When you've finished, you push a button and the set changes in a second. The studio can actually be small; it's the computer that generates size and richness."

Aside from saving money, Wachshon says the system also encourages creativity. Most fancy shows are limited because of the complexity of moving and operating sets. With this system you can add special effects such as explosions or people floating through walls, and it's all live-to-air shootworld. At the beginning everyone is hesitant, but afterward they love it." It was Nachshon who unearthed the idea of the virtual studio. A former airforce pilot, like many of BVR's employees, he was brought on to BVR in 1993 to find new commercial applications for BVR's sophisticated real time 3-D simulators.

For six months Nachshon explored the market turning up some 25 potential applications in medicine, entertainments, education and industry. After deliberation, BVR chose the virtual studio.

It was an obvious choice, says Nachshon. "Firstly, it's big business. We discovered that for years TV producers have been waiting for such a system, but no one could make it happen. The market is huge and people all over the world are spending billions of dollars on it annually. It has enormous business potential. "Secondly, BVR's simulator technology fits this technology like a glove. While BVR uses simulated battlefields, we do sets; when they use throttics. we use camera movements. It's basically the same. We had all the components we needed for this application and hundreds of man years had already been incorporated into the technology."

The company was founded in May 1994, initially with a staff of just two. Because the core technology already existed, development progressed quickly. Less than a year later, RT-Set took the technology to the international National American Broadcasting show in Las Vegas.

It caused a sensation. "We came to the show from nowhere and gave such an impressive presentation that people couldn't believe we were such a young company. Overnight we were all over the magazines," says Nacbshon. As a result of this success, an agreement was signed in 1996 with Chyron, a US company based in Long Island which sells broadcasting equipment to TV stations worldwide. The two companies carried out breakdown of ownership today shows that BVR owns nearly 60 percent of RT-Set, Chyron nearly 20%, Chailenge 10% and Star 10%. Employees also hold some shares.

As a result of these investments, RT-Set has built up a workforce of 23. It has a wholly owned subsidiary in the US through which it markets its system, and dealers in Korea, Malaysia, Taiwan, Australia, South America, Singapore and Mexico.

RT-Set's plan is to sell not just its product, but also its services. Customers will huy the software and hardware, RT-Set will instail n, train staff, make the necessary studio alterations and, once the customer can run the system alone, offer aftersales service.

Initially international companies were hesitant to invest in RT-Set's costly machines - which range in price from $85,000 for a low-cost system to $800,000 for the bigh-end virtual studio system without first trying them out. Throughout 1996, therefore, RT-Set made a series of agreements whereby it would co-produce programs by renting out its equipment and services.

One of the first projects was with CBS in New York to cover the US presidential elec-tions. Seoul Broadcasting System (SBS)

Halloween coverage and work for Disney. Disney and SBS are now negotiating to purchase the system. Other orders have already been received from Egypt, Taiwan and Russia, and further orders are anticipated from Spain and Jordan.

Nachshon expects to see tens of orders by the end of this year and hundreds by the end of 1998, "People now know our product bas marketing value. We are receiving lots of requests for proposals. We aren't profitable yet, but hope to be by the end of 1998." Yuval Zeiger, BVR's chief financial officer, is more cautious, however. Though he's hopeful that RT-Set will break even next year, he admits: "It's problematic." He believes the market isn't yet ready for such a sophisticated project. Ready or not, RT-Set isn't alone out there.

"At the start we thought we were the only wise guys in the neighborhood. Our biggest concern was how to educate the market, Today, because of the competition, virtual studios are one of the hottest things in broadcasting and TV. They're becoming the new standard for video production," says Nachshon, contradicting Zeiger.

RT-Set has four main competitors who all developed the same concept in parallel. These are Discreet Logic, a Canadian company; Accon, from the US; Orad in Israel and Brainstorm in Spain. This is stiff competidon and if, as Nachshon intends, RT-Sei is to grab the biggest slice of the market, it has some lough work ahead. The North American companies, for instance, have better market positioning and more financial clout.

So how does he anticipate beating the compection? "That quescion bothers us," says Nachshon. "We now know the answer. The market is confused and hesitant. People know they want virtual TV, but don't know which system to use or how to evaluate it. Everyone is pushing aggressively. "Anyone who's had a chance to use our system intensively has fallen in love with it. its performance and technology are superior. Both CBS and Disney have had a chance to evaluate it and have become groupies. We know this isn't the case with some competitors. Our strategy is to make the systems available to customers as much as possible. We want to build up to five demonstration centers in key places like New York, Berlin and Japan where people can give the system a go.

To build these demonstration centers, he plans to raise between $5m.-$10m. in another private placement this year.

Despite the fierce fighting ahead, Nachshon is optimistic about the future. "Today the company is well established and the product well-known. It looks like we are at the front of a big happening." He says he expects a public offering toward the end of 1998.

Anticipating growth, RT-Set bas taken 500 meters in a new office complex above Toys R Us and Ace Hardware in Shefayim. The complex, which is far from completion, bas a strange otherworldly feel, much like a bare set. Floors are concrete, ceilings and walls unfinished, windows empty: Workmen wander about with ladders over their shoulders. It's rather like the company - raw, unpolished, but on the verge of what could turn out to be a promising future.

Paris, 1936, has a healthy estimate of $4,000-$6,000; manipulated to make her look taller, it was published to Harper's Bazaar the same year. The slick evening gown and hair was Simpsoo's trademark. Her hair was so slick, in fact, that Beaton once noted that "even a fly would slip off it." The woman for wbom Edward gave up the throne was anything bot beautiful, despite a remarkable resemblaoce, at times, to my mother.

Edward himself had a weak. sullen face and often execrable taste in clothes. He loved sporting checks loud enough to have shocked eveo Evelyn Waugh; and affected garish kilts and vulgar tartan knee socks. All his vast wardrobe, including starched shirts and ties, are on offer. A rather snappy single-breasted summer suit by Emilio Lupori, 1949, has a modest estimate of $700-$1,000. PHILLIPS OF New York is conducting a sale of Judaica, Hebrew books and works of art September 10. The jots can be viewed at 406 East 79th between September 4 and 10. One of the rare lots is El Lissitzky's "Sichas Chulin" scroll, Moscow, 1917, with avant garde decoration (only one of five extant), with an estimate of $50,000-$70,000. Highlight of the silver section is a set of Torah finials by Reyndert Ringnalda, Amsterdam circa 1770s, with a top estimate of $50,000. Books and painongs are also on offer. The catalog can be had for $20 by calling Diana Uddo at (212) 570-4830.

Founded in London in 1796, Phillips opened in New York two years ago and holds regular sales of Judaica and Hebrew books. Judaica specialist Elissa S. Shay is available for consultations and queries about the lots.

D ack in the days when a dollar was a dollar, and Europe D was $5 a day, a letter was published in Arthur Frommer's guide that has had a lasting influence on the lives of many women travelers. The writer, whose name was withheld, explained how to live with only the dress on her back, one pair of underwear, a scarf, a sweater and, of course, her copy of Europe on $5 a Day.

While few people are willing to live within such Spartan restrictions, especially while on vacation, downsizing is the latest trend in luggage, according to Gilad Hess. general manger of Modan Industries, Israel's leading luggage manufacturer. Modan estimates israel's overall suitcase market at NIS 30 million per year.

Hess notes a sharp rise in demand for trolley-style suitcases, as well as ovemight bags for business travelers. Airline crew-inspired trolleys took the market by storm only five years ago, and now comprise some 60 percent of global sales. A frequent fliers dream, they're easy to carry, small enough to be considered carry-on luggage, plus they have wheels and a retractable handle.

The latest wrinkle on the luggage market is garment bags on wheeis, to keep clothes smooth. Hard cases have gained worldwide popularity due to airline baggage handlers, notorious for their cavalier attitude toward huggage a reputation fueled by the leg-endary 1960s TV ad of a gorilla, trying in vain to trash a hard shell Samsonite suitcase.

Dutch manufacturer Kipling, imported to Israel by Mews Import & Marketing, part of the Fishman group, has positioned itself as the standard in soft suitcases. Their products are outfitted with hard protective corners made of durable, machine-washable. 420-denier nylon in bright colors to attract the youth market - and sack-style bags, including pouches and knapsacks, have followed the Kipling style this year.

Traditionally, Israelis preferred soft cases, which can be stuffed to the rafters, even as the world moved toward hard cases. But nomadic Israelis discovered the weekend jauni. Kipling reports some 100,000 carry-on trolleys have already been sold in Israel, along with 20,000-30,000 larger sized trolleys. This claim is backed by another figure, supplied by Ya'acov Nussel of Top-Tik importers, who last year sold 18,000 suitcases in four days, via the Hyper-Kol chain.

This trend toward trolleys and ovemight bags was also noted by Yaki Hessel, deputy general manager of the Handyman chain (also of the Fishman group), which announced tast month that it is expanding its luggage department, after noting a 25% rise in suitcase sales this summer. The chain sells an average of 2,000 bags per year, of all types, mainly between May and the High Holy Day season. They have now added trolleys to their offerings, priced at NIS 99-NIS 350. Modan has trolleys priced at NIS 199-NIS 299 and Kipling carry-on trolleys start at NIS 650. Fliers beware: Trolleys now come in all shapes and sizes, and not all meet the 21 by 24 inch size dimensions (45 inches combined on US domestic flights) that allow them to be classified as carry-on luggage.

When deciding on which bag to take where, Modan's in-house designer Dana Weinfeld suggests taking a few key factors into account, chiefly the type, duration and nature of the trip.

"Only buy suitcases that come with a guarantee," says Weinfeld. "When buying a zippered bag. make sure the zipper is slurdy, Also check handles for sturdiness. Rubber wheels last longer [than their plastic counterparts]. Look for wheels that spin smoothly." Now that you've chosen your their parents. All other fashionable luggage, here comes the hard part: and two pairs of shoes - one for what to bring.

Thanks to today's new and stylish synthetics, anyone can live out the Frommer one-dress fantasy, but most people don'i care to. Still, there are ways to minimize the number of items you take, while maximizing their mix and match potential. Experts suggest taking: one or two basic suits (women: one pants, one skin ; three or four tops - T-shirts to turtlenecks, depending on the weather plus an extra sweater, jeans, a bathing suit and one coat. For women one good dress, made of something you can treat like a T-shirt such as conon fleece or polyester jersey is recommended. Then there's underwear, recommends "interfolding" gar-ments to avoid wrinkles, by placpajamas, socks and/or stockings comfort, one for fashion.

Build your wardrobe around a neutral color and accessorize for variety. Take formal attire only if you know you'll be using it.

Make a list of everything you plan to pack at least a week before your trip, review it and eliminate unnecessary items. If you're traveling with a spouse, review the list of toiletries together to avoid duplication. The wardrobe is picked, and it's time to pack. Every traveler has his or her own style - rolling, filing upright - though no one recommends the throw-it-all-in-a-bigmess method, as clothes that slide around tend to wrinkle. Samsonite ing trousers, skirts, dresses, blouses and jackets in the suitcase with the waistband or collar at the edges, alternating side to side. Allow unfolded garments and sleeves to hang out on both sides, then interfold by folding the extensions hanging over the sides; alternate from side to side, foldiog one garment over the other, and smoothing wrinkles as you go.

Place heavy items to the rear of your suitcase, next to the surface hinges, so they don't crush your clothes when the suitcase is upright.

Before you leave, make sure all luggage is tagged with your name and address. Paste ID cards both on the inside and outside of each bag. And don't forget - have a nice trip!

Dodgers send Mets to 4th-straight loss London Calling Not academic enough By Mark Rivlin

Imagine going to study the Science of Sport at university and finding that you are majoring in ten-pin bowling and snooker. That appears to be the implication of the government's plans concern-ing the National Academy of Sporting Excellence. According to Culture Secretary Chris Smith, the country's three most popular spons - football, cricket and rugby - are to be excluded from government funding in favor of the development of minority sports.

Speaking at the weekend, Mr. Smith said that the £100 million academy would concentrate on Olympic and noo-commercial sports, the implication being that 'the big three' were more than capable of funding their own academies with the money rolling in from televisioo and sponsorship. But reaction from the cricket and rugby bosses suggests that Mr. Smith may have made a political blunder. Lord MacLaurin, chairman of the English Cricket board, demanded the freedom to sell cricket rights to the highest bidder - presumably Sky TV - as a reaction to losing ont on government funds. Presently, all home Test matches are shown on terrestrial televisioo as a means of preserving certain 'listed' sports for the majority of fans who cannot afford a subscription to the satellite and cable companies.

Lord MacLaurin did oot mince his words: "If the government are not going to help us via the academy, then fine - just take os off the listed events and allow us to negotiate for ourselves. Ministers canoot have their cake and cat it." Of course, the Football authorities have no such worries about government money, the FA confirming over the weekend that it was still planning to set np its own academy.

The season had hardly got going wheo the Premiership was forced into temporary redundancy because of this week's World Cup games. In the two games played to date, there were no shortage of surprises with Aston Villa, on his way to Newcastle. Once again, the hyperbole did oot match the reality, since the day before Newcastle boss Kenny Dalglish landed veteran striker Ian Rush from Leeds. As the Guardian put it on Monday morning: "The plausibility rating of Macmanaman joining Newcastle is about 2/10. Not least because Dalglish's budget seems to stop at free transfers right now."

The seasoo has certaioly begun well for the two Israelis currently in town. Eyal Berkovic and Ronnie Rosenthal are both in top form for West Ham and Watford. and with Itzhik Zohar set to join Crystal Palace this week, there will be no shortage of material for the Israeli correspondents here.

Berkovic is playing a fairly free role for the Hammers and is able to get more forward than he did at Southampton. Rosenthal's move to Watford may have raised a few eyebrows, but moving down two divisions has oot dented his confidence. In his first two games, he has scored and made goals and he has obviously reckoned that regular soccer and a generous threeyear contract to the Second Divisioo is preferable to reserve team soccer and a generous contract in the Premiership. With the Ashes already decided, the England selectors have made three changes to the squad for today's sixth and final Test at the Oval. Middlesex captain Mark Ramprakash finally gets a chance to resurrect his international career after a series of failures which culminated in an average of 17 in 19 Tests. Once again, his batting has been devastating in the County Championship with five centuries in his 1180 first-class runs. The Australians, however, will know that Ramprakash's weakness is in the Test arena and the pressure will be on him as he walks to the crease. After the defeat in the fifth Test, one would have thought that things could not get any worse for England captain Mike Atherton. Bnt on Saturday, playing for Lancashire at Derby, Atherton was dismissed twice for under 10 in a

NEW YORK (AP) - Eric Karros hit a tiebreaking home run with two outs in the eighth inning and newly acquired Eric Youog had three hits, leading the Los Angeles Dodgers over the New York Mets

4-2 Tuesday night. Ismael Valdes (8-10) pitched seven strong innings as the Dodgers sent New York to its fourth straight loss. A two-run single by pitcher Brian Bohanon was all the Mets could manage in their eighth defeat in 11 games. Pirates 5, Padres 3

Keith Osik's two-run, two-out double finished off the Pirates' three-run sixth inning and Joo Lieber won at bome for the first time since June 30.

Jose Guillen had a pair of runscoring singles as the Pirates scored all but one of their five runs ainst Padres starter Pete Smith (4-4) with two onts.

The Pirates, beginning a stretch of 10 home games in oine days, won their third in four games and fifth in seven games. They had lost four in a row to the Padres, including a three-game sweep in San Diego on July 22-24. Lieber (8-12) won bis second in a row after failing to win for six consecutive starts.

Rich Loiselle pitched the ninth for his 21st save, a record for a Pirates rookie.

Marlins 8, Cubs 1 Bobby Bonilla followed two bases-loaded walks with a grand slam io the fifth and Alex Fernandez pitched a four-hitter as Florida won at home.

Fernandez (16-8) walked one and struck out seven in his fifth complete game. He has won his last six starts and 11 of 13. The right-hander, 7-1 since the All-Star break, is 3-0 against the Cubs this season and has allowed just two runs and 10 hits in 24% innings against them.

The Marlins, who got three runs on bases-loaded walks, are 6-0 against the Cubs this season.

Braves 4, Astros 3 John Smoltz struck out a seasonhigh 11 in eight inniogs and Jeff Blauser hit a two-run borner as visiting Atlanta handed Mike Hampton his first loss since June Smoltz (12-10) shut out the Astros antil Derek Bell led off the sixth inning with his 10th homer. Smoltz allowed three runs and Liverpool and Spurs finding themselves at the wrong end of the table.

There is already talk of a crisis of confidence at Anfield after last week's home defeat by Leicester. Fans phooiog into Richard Littlejohn's midweek soccer radio show complained of players like Steve Macmanaman and Jamie Redknapp spending more time grooming themselves in front of the mirror than "playing their bearts out for the club."

Macmanaman's performance in the game against Leicester left a lot to be desired and yet the very next morning, he was on a plane to Barcelona with the intention of securing a £12m move having discovered that Liverpool were apparently willing to let him go. What happened in the Catalan capital was pure football fantasy as the player sat in a botel while advisers and agents met and failed to come to an agreement over terms (reportedly a £40,000 weekly salary). Macmanaman was back on the evening flight bome very much a Liverpool player.

By Sunday morning be was the subject of more speculation - this time in the News of the World newspaper which ran a back page splash suggesting the player was day by a resurgeot Devon Malcolm as Lancashire slumped to an innings defeat. On his way back to the pavilion the second time. Atherton was roundly jeered by the Derbyshire crowd. And with former England opener Geoff Boycott giving Atherton a vote of oo-confidence on Saturday, the end of the line is ocar unless he can somehow conjure a win at the Oval. Finally, to the cricket incident of the week; the oear punch-up betweeo Mark Illott and Robert Croft during the Essex-Glamorgan Nat West semifical tie at Chelmsford. It was an unsavory moment, to say the least, but in the context of the tie it was fairly icoocuous, and had it occurred on a soccer pirch, there would bave been oo reactioo at all. Both players were fined £1,000 by their clubs and are oow waiting for a disciplinary bearing from the Eoglish Cricket Board.

These days, wheo money rules supreme, and a place in the final at Lord's is worth so much more than cricketing glory, the game has shown it needs to flex its disciplinary muscles when push comes to shove.

Third baseman Wade Boggs, better known for his batting prowess, livened up a dreadful night for the New York Yankees by tossing a surprise inning of relief.

Boggs, a 14-year veteran with more than 2,500 career hits. revived a bored crowd in the bottom of the eighth inning at Anabeim Stadium.

By then, the Yankees had nothing to lose except the game, which they did hy a 12-4 score. And Boggs got a chance to fulfill a longtime dream.

The sight of the 39-year-old Boggs trotting to the mound brought the cheering crowd to its feet.

I was coming in and the last thing I heard was leff Nelson say, "We're second in the league in pitching. Don't screw it up," Boggs said. After some warmup tosses, he unleashed the knuckleball his father taught him to throw as a Little Leaguer in Georgia.

"I just sort of felt like Phil Niekro and Charlie Hough all rolled into one, and I was just having fun with it," Boggs said,

So were the fans and the home plate umpire, who said, "Do you want the pitching zone or the batting zone, now that you're pitching?"

Boggs' first pitch was a strike to Luis Alicea. He got ahead in the count, but wound up yielding a walk.

Next up was Tim Salmon, who grounded into a force play Garret Anderson grounded out and then Boggs struck out Todd Greene to end the inning. Boggs' line was 3 modest one walk and one strikeout in one inning. He tossed 11 strikes and six balls to the four batters

Boggs tipped his cap to the raucous crowd oo the way to the dugout. The fans went wild, chanting, "Wasade! Wasade!" and he bounded up the dugout steps for another up of his cap. (AP)

Israel's World Cup qualifying trial came to a brave but disappointing end in last night's European Group 5 clash against Bnlgaria in Sofia's Levski Stadium. The Israelis ended 1-0 losers in a match decided by a 68th-mioute goal scored by Bulgarian substitute Lyuboslav Penev in froot of a fiercely partisan crowd of 25,000.

Shlomo Scharf's men needed a victory to retain any hope of proessing into next year's finals in France. Last night's result leapfrogged the Bulgarians into pole position over the Israelis and former leaders Russia. The Bulgarians now head the Group with 15 points, ahead of Russia who remain on 14 points and the Israelis who end their group pley in third position with 13 points from their complete roster of eight matches.

The Bulgarians will go on to fight for a place in the finals when they play Russia at bome and of Bulgaria's grip on the match through some fast breaks, and nearly outwitted the home side when Haim Revivo dummied his way through two Bulgarian center backs in the 19th minute, but sent

Eight minutes later, the Bulgarians should have taken the lead when Daniel Borimirov was put through the Israeli defense by captain Hristo Stoichkov but fired wide with just Rafi Cohen to beat. Seosing the need to bolster his attack Bulgarian coach Hristo Bonev exchanged defender Ivailo Petkov with Pency at the beginning of the second half. The addition helped liven Stoichkov who had the misfortune to see a sting-

Bolstered by this narrow escape and the growing belief that this could just be their night of glory, Israeli midfielder Avi Nimni began to take responsibility for taking the ball deep into Bulgarian territory with some telling sorties down the left flank.

Nimni found himself free of attention in the 53rd minute, but his shot lacked accuracy and power. Four minutes later he foraged inside the Bulgarian area again only to be rudely upended by fullback Trifon Ivanov, Nimni screamed for a penalty but his strong appeal was treated with scorn by the Hungarian referee who waved play on.

The Bulgarians began to regain some composure with the 59th minute introduction of 1994 World Cup bero Yordan Lechkov.

After further attempts at goal by Revivo at one end and Balakov at the other, Lechkov engineered the killer move with virtually his first touch of the game. Skirting down the right he side-footed the ball to Emil Kostadinov who craftily backheeled a return pass to Lechkov who entered the area then tucked a perfect pass on to Penev who fired ioto goal.

Israel bid adieu to France

1-0 loss to Bulgaria keeps Israel out of '98 World Cup

A minute later, the Bulgarians lost Anatoli Nankov who received a red card as a result of a clash with David Amsalem. Having nothing to lose, Scharf threw on strikers Ronen Harazi and Alon Mizrahi in place of Eli Ohana and the battered Felix Halfon The injection of assocking talent helped-little against a seasoned opponent skilled at protecting a narrow but priceless lead, and the Bulgarians saw out the remaining time with little in the way of threats on their goal.

The final act of the match came with the dismissal of Alon Hazan who collected his second booking of the game with a tackle on Zlatko Yankov in the 89th minute. A few minutes later Israel's campaign was over and the Bulgarian crowd celebrated a victory that could once again send them towards another World Cup finals gala.

Fot Israel another period of waiting and rebuilding lies in store, together with the memories of what might have been. In truth the end came last November with the blue-and-white squad's surprise defeat in Cyprus. In other matches yesterday, Romania guaranteed themselves a trip to France with a 4-2 win over Macedonia.

'In Hollywood, there's a law that says when you do a sci-fi movie, you have to have Jeff Goldblum.'

By DOUGLAS J. ROWE

feff Goldblum flounces in, flints and fools around. And if the's feeling a little full of himself and having a ton of fun, why not? He's been in the top two money-making films of the decade, and now he's in a movie that might make it three. Wheeeeee! Life is good. He walks the walk of a successful incivic star, almost gliding as he enters a conference room in the midtown offices of Universal Studios, producers of The Lost World: Jurassic Park, which had box-office totals approaching $200 million after just three weeks. He sees a comely blonde who's helping to take his photograph, has her tening him of her name since it's been a year since she last took his picture, and proceeds to hum, repeat her name like a mantra, and generally acts like - as be himself mission a "simpleton." He's malable and agreeable as he poses, muss and vamps for the camera. "I'man puppet on a string," he says as the photographer puts him through his paces. "I'm like Mr. Pipe Cleaner." Because of the whirl of publicity for Steven Spielberg's sequel to his mega-hit fundssic Park, Goldblum is asked if he speen working hard. ""Well, if this looks like work," he tells the photographer, striking another pose. "You're working harder than I am." He works the mantra enough to acquire a phone "number and find out that he and the photo assistant have a mutual friend, Dean Devlin, producer and

Life's a beach at The Valley

By PAM BECKER

المحاذات الأراث بالمتحافظ ينشو فخرا اجتفا بارح محوويه

The Valley has come to Tel Aviv. No, Tori Spelling isn't making aliya. Sandwiched between the Yarkon River and the Reading Power Station is The Valley, a new dance club for twenty-somethings.

Outdoors, with palm uses and pebbles on the ground, The Valley manages to create a beach-party feel, on the other side of town from the beach, The music is '80s, dance, trance, house and a lot of techno (perhaps too much techno for local Anglo tastes). A series of wooden platforms serve as dance floors for the couple hundred parrons. For those who want to take a break from the dance floor, lawn chairs and tables overlook the water. The atmosphere works. While it isn't exactly the beach, the music is good to dance to, the lake pretty at night, the nocturnal breeze comfortable, and you almost forget about the power station's buge silos filled with God knows what behind the DJ.

To quote one clubber, the people "Jook, like nice kids having a good time." As an added bonus, sweets were passed out in the early morning hours, and the crowd responded happily. Apparently, a different treat, such as popsicles and Beduin-type snacks, is given out each week.

Said Marcel Hass, a British-Israeli, "I run a tour company so I am always looking for new places to go. Usually on Friday nights it's hard to find clubs for 25 plus. The Valley has a great location and a sophisticated atmosphere. It's small, compact, away from everything, and if you don't want to dance, there are places to sit down and get away from it. The club is not enclosed so you're not being suffocated in a building, and because you have to make an effort to get there, you feel like you're going somewhere." Added Anat Rahavi, "I like the way it was built.

The three separate dance floors means there's plenty of space to dance. That makes it really nice. And there's lots of parking."

Run by Nissim and Ifat, who like to be addressed on a first-name basis. The Valley is open on Friday nights throughout the summer, from midnight to six, with the higgest crowds at 1:30 a.m. Entrance is NIS 40 per person and a beer costs NIS 12.

To find The Valley, drive all the way up Ibn Gvirol, take a left at the power station and follow the signs. A breezy alternative to the usual Tel Aviv dance clubs, The Valley is worth checking out while the summer lasts.

Devlip once joked that "in Hollywood, there's a law that says when you do a sci-fi movie, you have to have Jeff Goldburn." Thing is, it's no joke. Ocldbham's sci-fi roles amount to a billion-dollar filmography.

Once the camera stops whirring and he settles down to talk, Goldblum says he feels grateful to be in these ultra-mega block-Jeff Goldblum reprises his role as mathematician Ian Malcolm in the mega-hit 'The Lost World: Jurassic Park.' bustees: "It's nice for me, and good for me professionally. We're luckily in grande dame of Israeli cinema recalls her pick of the best five each other's lives very elosely, not Israeli films.

1. Siege "Directed by Gilberto Tofano, we made this film immediately after the Six Day War. It's the story of the widow of an Israeli paraehute commander who is besieged by friends of her husband. It's also the story of how the country was besieged, even after the glorious victory. It's a very good film - the best - and not only I think so. When a retrospective of my films was shown in Toronto, it was also considered the best. And it's very relevant today. People ask me when they see it now if it is a new film about terrorism or the fighting on the northern border. It's unbelievable how relevant it is."

2. Beyond the Walls

This was directed by Uri Barbash in 1984. It's about lewish and Arah prisoners in an Israeli jail. It was the first time the coexistence between Jews and Arabs was treated so effectively. I find it a very powerful movie from every aspect. It's an excellent script and the acting is great. Since then, quite a few films have dealt with this subject - how Jews and Arabs live together — but in a very shallow, superficial way. They always use a silly love story between a Jewish boy and an Arab girl, for example. But Beyond the Wolls was a very serious film."

3. Life According to Agfa

"This is a very mature, powerful film [also starring Almagor]. Only a mature society can look at itself Although my world is quite differ- to remember."

4. The Summer of Aviya "This is a very personal film [the movie was based on Almagor's autobiography]. For my generation, it took us a few decades to be able to deal with our parents' past. The Holocaust was a hush-hush subject. It took time to grow my white hair and to be able to deal with my dark past. The fact is that after that, a few other films were made that dealt with the same subject. The Summer of Ariya was the first time I dealt with my own past. It was very therapeutic,"

5. Noa At 17

"Directed by Yitzhak Yeshurun, this is about the break-up of a kibbutz family. It's very beautiful and intense and very touching. The break-up of the kibbutz movement was a tragedy. People who were pioneers and had built so much together, they had to hreak up because of ideology. It is a very tragic thing for Israeli society. The way the director dealt with that, through the eyes of a 17-year-old girl, was excellent. The situation in the kibbutz is different now, but such a courageous film. still this tragedy is very important but I'm trying to keep all of that aggressively undisplayed." (AP) MASTER SAXOPHONIST (and mentor to members of the Spin Doctors and Blues Traveller)

formal dinners at the court of England's Queen Elizabeth 1 were extraordinary events. A weel German visitor who dined at the Mey Th queen's palace at Greenwich in 1598 wrote that "the meal was final announced by 12 irunipets and Mor M two kettledrums that made the castle ring for half an hour." died Dinner itself, served by members of the queen's guard, all dressed in Wœ play Be scarlet, consisted of six courses, each consisting of 24 different dishes. Back to school

By PHYLLIS GLAZER

hose glorious mornings of L being able to sleep just a little bit later, instead of waking up to the mad rush of getting kids off to school, are almost over. Long, leisurely breakfasts are about to give way to a quick look through he refrigerator on the way out the

Unfortunately, more and more children leave bome in the momings without having breakfast. This is astounding considering the amount of information that suggests that children who don't eat breakfast find it more difficult to concentrate in school. Sugar-laden cereals also have been shown to negatively effect the ability to concentrate.

One of the best breakfasts is the once-standard Israeli; breakfast; salad; hard-boiled eggs; cheese and rolls; French toast or pancakes made with whole-wheat products and sweetened with real maple syrup, hooey or cinnamon and sugar, hot oatmeal; or nutritious muffins.

Ten o'clock snacks also can be a good source of vitamins, minerals and protein, helping to fill out a skimpy breakfast. One of the most traditional of these in Israel is fatty chocolate spread slathered on white bread. A better choice certainly would be a cheese or tuna sandwich (kids especially like them cut in quarters) and vegctable sticks, followed by a piece of fresh fruit. For kids who don't like bread, whole-wheat crackers with an individually wrapped (so the crackers don't get soggy) cubc of cheese or halva are fun. School trips are junk-food time though. You still can pack a nourishing sandwich and fruit, freeze a bottle bf water instead of a fruit drink, and add a few homemade cookies or a muffin. Below are some of my favorite back-to-school recipes.

PANCAKES If you don't like the taste of whole-wheat pancakes, but want to serve something nutritious anyway, try these white flour pancakes enriched with wheat germ.

2 eggs 2 Tosp. oil 21/2 cups milk 1 1/2 cups regular or enriched white flour I cup wheat germ 2 tsp. baking powder 2 Tosp. brown sugar dash salt

Use a fork to mix together the eggs, oil and half the milk. Stir in the dry ingredients, and add enough milk to create a runny but still slightly thick mixture. Heat a heavy frying pan till drops of water "dance" on it.

Using a paper towel, lightly grease the pan and then pour 1/4-1/3 cup of the mixture into it, to make 4 pancakes. Cook till bubbles appear and burst on the top, turn and cook the other side. If the pancakes brown too quickly, it means the temperature was too high and should be lowered slightly.

Either serve the pancakes now or cool and store them in the freezer with wax paper between each layer. (Makes 18 pancakes.)

OATMEAL RAISIN MUFFINS

I cup instant oatmeal I cup buttermilk or sour cream l egg 1/2 cup oil 1/2 cup whole-wheat flour 1/2 cup white flour

1 tsp. baking powder 1/- Isp. salt v/: tsp. baking soda 1/2 cup demerara or packed brown sugar √. cup raisins

Thursday, August 21, 1997 The Jerusalem Post

Heat the oven to 180°C. In a large bowl, mix together the oat-meal and buttermilk and let stand for 3-4 minutes. Mix in the egg and oil. Using a wooden spoon, stir in the remaining dry ingredi-ents, mixing just until smooth. Stir in the raisins. Pour into greased muffin cups (or use paper cups to line a baking pan). Bake 18-20 minutes until golden. Serve warm with butter and honey. (Makes 12 muffins.)

CINNAMON WHEAT GERM COOKIES

200 gr. butter 11/2 cups brown or demerara sugar 2 eggs l tsp. vanilla 1/2 cup wheat germ 21/2 cups whole-wheat flour (or part white flour) 2 tsp. baking powder 1/2 tsp. salt 1/: cup demerara sugar 1 tsp. cinnamon

Beat butter and brown sugar till fluffy. Beat in the eggs one at a time. Stir in the vanilla and wheat germ, Sift together flour, baking powder and salt and beat into the butter mixture,

In a small bowl, mix demerara sugar and cinnamon. Form the cookie dough into small balls and roll them in the cinnamon-sugar mixture.

Place 5 cm. apart on an ungreased cookie sheet. Bake in a preheated 200°C oven for 8-10 minutes and cool on a rack.

of the ordinary, for many monarchs, before and after Elizabeth's time, entenained lavishly. It was almost as if the serving of food was meant to reflect the wealth and power of the royal family.

What was unusual is that Elizabeth rarely dined with her guests. Although she would generally make an appearance at the beginning of dinner, it was the queen's habit to then retire to her private rooms, there to eat very moderate meals. She rarely drank wine and a single small lantb chop and one or two asparagus spears were quite enough for her dinners. But Elizabeth was not always moderate in her dining habits. Addicted to sweets, she constantly carried candies with her in the folds of her gown, doled on fruit pies and ineringues and adored marzipan. In August 1583, the queen invited six of her ladies-in-waiting to moming refreshments. When they arrived, they found a table almost five meters long completely covered with cakes and fresh fruits. Probably as a result of the mas-sive recent advertising campaign for Pringle's Chips, many readers have asked me to trace the history of the humble potato chip. An equal number also have asked me to evaluate the chips currently available in local markets.

The recorded history of the potato chip began in 1842, when John Johnson, a second-generation American of Swedish descent, walked into the US Patent Office in New York City to apply for a patent for "potato chips."

Johnson had discovered that paper-thin slices of potatoes fried in very hot oil, dried and sprinkled generously with salt made marvelous snacks. The patent was granted, but Johnson failed to convince anyone that his discovery could be commercially viable.

It was only in 1935 that Ralston-Purina, one of America's largest food manufacturers, saw the potential in these snacks. Johnson's patent had long since expired (and so had Johnson), but within a few years his invention had become one of American's favorite forms of junk food.

Albert Einstein, Joan Baez and John F. Kennedy were rarely to be found without a bag of potato snacks within easy reach. And, as if to demonstrate their universal appeal, these were also the favorite snacks of Charles de Gaulle, Aristotle Onassis and Japanese emperor Hirohito.

While it takes a distinct act of charity to categorize them as anything other than junk food, it would take a hard-hearted curmudgeon to deny that good potato snacks are a gift from the heavens.

Pringles - The Best Chips?

More than 20 years ago, when visiting an American air-force base in Wiesbaden, Germany, 1 tasted Pringles Original Potato Crisps for the first time. My initial reaction was to be offended, for unlike most polato chips, these came in tubes instead of bags. Even more strange was that every chip in each tube was identical in shape to every other one.

When I learned that these chips were shaped by machines that pressed a mixture of dehydrated potato flakes, vegetable oil, potato starch and salt,) was even more offended. No real potato chips, I reasoned, could be made in this way. After I tasted them, however, all of my objections faded away the best potato chips I had ever tasted.

Despite their sudden-felt need for advertising, there is nothing new about Pringles here; the chips made their initial appearance locally nearly four years ago.

The chips, produced by Proctor and Gamble's facilities in Belgium, come in three different versions: the first the so-called Original, which is a simple, salty version; the second is barbecue flavored: and the third has the flavors of cream cheese and onion.

These chips may be machinemade, but, to their credit, they contain only natural ingredients. And unlike many other brands of potato chips which are crisp when you pop them into your mouth but rapidly turn to mush as you chew them, Pringles seem to stay erisp no matter how long you savor them in your mouth. Even better, they have just the right amount of salt and actually taste like potaloes

Other Recommended Chips Patricia Wells, the respected culinary writer for New York magazine once said, "In the heart of every gastronome lies the soul of a fastfood junkie." Keeping that in mind, I avoided feeling too much guilt as enjoyed retasting most of the locally available chips. Even though I find that the Pringles chips have the advantage on flavor and crispness, I was surprised and pleased to realize that I could easily recommend the chips of at least five other companies, including two of Israel's largest producers of food. The Chipsli chips of Vita and the various series put out by Osem including its Country-Style Chips with and without onions - are alt thin and crisp and have the charm of actually tasting like potatoes.

Best of all, whether thick cut, thin cut or in shoe-string form, all remain crisp while being chewed and all have good flavor.

In addition to being equally appealing, Ruffles, the chips of the nultinational Pepsi Cola Food Corporation, are so popular that they generate over one billion dollars worth of revenue annually.

Also very tasty are the Chipsaltin of German company Bahlsen. What may put some off the Bahlsen chips is that m addition to dehydrated potatoes and a variety of spices, they also contain ingredients identified as E[4]] E304 and E471. I usually avoid eating things that contain numbers and not food, but I gladly will

From better to worse

Good: Two and a half years ago. after signing a coproduction agreement with Swiss company, Emmi, Tnuva released the first in its series of distinctly Swiss-style yogurts. Tastes vary between geographic regions, and the Swiss like their yogurt lighter, less defined in flavor, lcss tangy and more creamy in consistency than most Mediterranean yogurts.

Tnuva has recently added several fruit-flavored yogurts to its Emmi line. I was delighted first of all that each of those I sampled (one with red grapefruit sections, one with oranges and pistachio nuts, one with peaches and one with strawberries) contained nothing more than yogurt, fruits and sugar. With no artificial colors or any of the other objectionable additives that are found in too many similar products, each has clean, rich and refreshing flavors. Definitely worth trying.

Indifferent: PriGat has recently released new versions of tomato. orange, grapefruit, pineapple and apple juice. All come in handsome, easy to open and easy to reseal containers and none contain preservatives or coloring agents. Alas, although alt are acceptable, all are made from fruit concentrates, and it is undeniable that this places them a step below fresh juices in quality and flavor.

The one I most highly recommend is the tomato juicc, which is good as is, but even better with the addition of a bit of Tabasco sauce and a bit of freshly grated black pepper sprinkled over. They are acceptably priced at NIS 5.49 per liter.

JON

Bad: The mixed fruit cocktail of President's Choice is one in a series of products produced in Canada for the Greenberg chain of supermarkets. The product contains primarily water and the concentrated juice of cranberries. apples, blueberries, raspberries and strawberries.

Unfortunately, by combining so many fruits in a single cocktail and then adding what we are told are natural flavors, the flavor of none of the fruits makes itself felt. If the cocktail were refreshing, much of that might be forgivable. But, because it is so very sweet, it fails completely to quench the thirst. NIS 16.50 for 1.89-liter plastic containers.

Connetable Talbot, Saint Julien, 1994: Always reliable, this second wine of Chateau Talbot has medium body, lots of ripe fruits and a hint of tobacco to add to its charms. Medium bodied and with good fruit character, the wine can be drunk now or held for several years longer. NIS 155. Score: 87+.

Joseph Faiveley, Mercury ter cru, Clos du Roy, 1994: 1994 was not a very good year for Burgundy red wines and this wine is not nearly as good as the 1993 version that still can be found in some wine stores. The wine is light to medium bodied and has nice strawberry overtones, but is a bit too rustic. Drink young. Dear at about NIS 150. Score 82+.

L'Esprit de Teyssler, Chateau Teyssier, Bordeaux Superieur, 1994: Tannic and spicy, with an interesting tomato character overlaid by flavors and aromas of dark cherries, the wine is somewhat harmed by a clumsy finish. A bit dear at NIS 83. Score 82.

But there was a great deal more. The week-long trip got off to a more-than-promising start with our first slopover at the Eberbach Monastery near the town of Eltville on the Rhinegau, about half an hour's drive from Frankfurt Airport. Seasoned travelers may already have come across renovated monasteries in other parts of Europe. For me, it was an unforgettable first.

The hotel opened just recently in what were once the monastery's shed and stables at the outer edge of the massive complex of monastery buildings, many dating back to the 12th century. Successfully designed to capture the once-spartan monastery atmosphere, the rooms are done up in white and gray, with the simplest of lines for the furniture and small pictures of the monastery grounds on the walls. The architect left portions of the massive beams exposed to remind the guest of what the now cool and sophisticated building once looked like. The price of a double room and breakfast is DM 160 (NIS 300), and the hotel features a fine restaurant

Betweeo 1136 and 1803, the monastery was inhabited by monks of the Cistercian Order, a pious and hardworking sect which created a thriving economy from vineyards planted in one of the most suitable climates in Germany. Visitors canstill see the massive wine presses that served the monastery.

Even more impressive is the perfecily preserved Romantic church, acoustically designed to do full justice to the Gregorian chants recited there from its earliest years.

Dan Izenberg steps off the beaten track in Germany and discovers the Neckar Valley - magnificent castles, renovated monasteries and medieval towns most foreign tourists never knew existed.

Rhine. The town's landmark is a beautiful castle tower built in the 14th century. And Eltville's citizens take pride in the 22,000 rose bushes that decorate the town.

Our next stop was the twin city of Idar-Oberstein. Its main claim to fame is the oow-idle gemstone mine at nearby Steinkaulenberg, the largest such mine ever worked in Europe. The complex of buildings served as the residence of the Prince Electors of the Palatinate for five centuries. Many of the electors built their own additions to the site, and so it includes every style from Gothic to High Renaissance. The buildings are surrounded by a deep and wide moat, filled in its time with wild animals rather than where. For centuries, the castle seated impreg-

Friedrich apparently loved his queen so much that he had gate (still standing) to the palace built in a single night as a gift to celebrate her arrival. Later, at Elizabeth's request, Friedrich built an English garden. To do so, he leveled some of the ground around the castle, making it more easily acces-sible to outsiders.

Soon afterwards, he went off to fight in what became known as the Thirty Years War, and was defeated near Prague. Back home, Heidelberg Castle was breached and severely damaged. So was the town below. Only 15 buildings including what today serves as the university's main cafeteria - survived the devastation.

The castle and town were rebuilt, only to be destroyed again in 1693, during the War of Succession. One last attempt to rebuild the castle was thwarted by a bolt of lightning. But the hauntingly beautiful ruins became an inspiration for Romantic

But most impressive of all the sites was the dormitory - a huge, bare chamber where dozens, if not hundreds, of manks slept side by side on pieces of board placed on the floor. It took many years for glass to be installed in the high windows that perforated the walls on each side of the cavernous room. In Eberbach's early, pious period, the life expectancy of the monks, who usually came from the wealthiest families in the country, was 25-35 years. Luckily for them, the monks lost some of their piety over the centuries.

Their last refectory was done up in lavish baroque style, with ornate furniture and wall designs revealing the wealth the monks had amassed and the good life they had come to enjoy. Those who have seen the medieval mystery movie based on Umberto Eco's novel The Name of the Rose will recognize the church and dormitory, since the interior scenes were shot at the Eberbach Monastery

A guide explained how difficult the work was, and how miners' children eventually moved to South America and began sending larger and more easily extractable gents home for cutting. Schwetzingen was the summer home of the last elector of the Palatinate, Carl Theodor, who built a magnificent chateau and an even more magnificent garden to idle away the long summer days and nights. The formal garden was modeled after Versailles and is filled with antique busts and urns, a large pond, magnificent trees and even a full-scale mosque - an expression of the trendy fascination the Orient exerted on the European aristocracy of the time. Tucked away at the end of this very formal, symmetrical garden is a much wilder and romantic English one. The garden is a natural magnet for any town resident who fancies a stroll. DAVID BRINN

Part of Jerry Garcia's magic was enabling listeners to relive the trippy days of the summer of love through his complex, emotive guilar playing. And just because he died two years ago is no reason for the magic to wane, as the fans who attend tonight's cinematic tribute to Garcia and his band. The Grateful Dead, will discover.

Past gatherings have succeeded in capturing at least part of the beam of a Grateful Dead concert and with clips from a 1989 show, a documentary on the making of the band's classic American Beauty, and a screening of a recent concert by the band's other guilarist. Bob Weir, tonight's show should be no exception.

At the Tel Aviv Cinematheque at 10 p. m.

Israeli (and indeed foreign) films we Dead ensures that Jerry Garcia's legacy lives on. have been bombarded with on television this summer, it will be a welcome change to watch Eran Riklis's Cup Final looight at 8:45 on Channel 1. Set in Lebanon duriog the 1982 Lebanon war, at the time of the World Cup soccer finals in Spaio, the film examines the special relationship that develops wheo an IDF reservist with tickets to the playoff match is taken prisoner by a PLO unit in Lebanon. Doring the seven days of his captivity, he develops a bond with his Arab captors based on their common support for the Italian team. With Moshe lvgi and Muhammad Bakri.

 MEN IN BLACK - Barry Sonnenfeld's playfully off-beat parody of the Martian-movie genre stars Tommy Lee Jones and Will Smith as nattily dressed officers in a top-secret agency designed to keep track of all alien life forms cur-> reotly residing on planet Earth. The funniest thing about the film, which was written by Ed Soloman from a comic book by Lowell Cunningham, is its erisply matter-of-fact approach to good oldworldly law and order. There's something at once knowing and rather resigned about the practical, slightly archaic way in which the MiBs go about their work - cruising their beat, drinking coffee from paper cups, pulling over alien-owned ears to check the driver's license and registration Clearly, the universe is loo vast and myslerious a place to be policed effectively by a few deputized mortals in a gas-guzzling Plymouth. But the agents do what they can to keep the peace, and their actions come to seem logical in a loopy, deadpan way: of course there are Martians on the streets of New York, and of course someone highup most know about it. The movie pokes gentle fun at conspiracy theories at the same time that it honors them. With Linda Fiorentino, who doesn't bave enough to do as a leggy coroner/damsel in distress. The lock-up in Jerusalem's Russian Compound has to be tom down, Supreme Court President Aharon Barak said yesterday. This is an Ottoman building from the 19th century that is not fit to serve as a lock-up. No matter how much it is refurbished, it will not help," Barak said. He was speaking after touring the facility along with Justice Minister Tzahi Hanegbi and Knessel Law Comminee chairman Shaul Yahalom. "Deteotion cannot be a means of, interrogation," Barak added. "The nature of a society is also measured by the nature of its lock-up facilities. [Here] we have terrible conditions. There are no modern toilets, the rooms are not aired, and detainees can get to the telephone only once a day." Barak pointed out that a "considerable percentage" of the detainees: would not be indicted and that others would be proven innocent.

They are still innocent people. Many of them will be sem home." he said. "There is no separation here of those who are being interrogated from those who have already been indicted and should be moved to a more permanent facility."

He said that judges should be aware of the conditions in the lockup when they remand people into custody.

However, Barak noted that the Prisons Service has tried to improve the conditions.

"We have invested a great deal of in improvements," money Jerusalem police chief Cmdr. Yair Yitzhaki told Barak. "I too would like to tear down the building, but law required that every prisoner has we have to wait until the plan to 4.5 meters of space, a bed and matbuild a new detention center is tress, and regular meals. They eat at irregular hours lunch is at 10 a.m. - and there is a terrible stench. This is a violation of the basic rules of democracy." Yahalom said.

gruesome world

By BATSHEVA TSUR

A jumble of buildings make up the lerusalem police headquarters in the Russian Compound. Go up some steep stairs, next to the garbage cans and parked police vans, and you will enter the city lock-up. tt is a world of barred doors and burglar-proofed air vents. Grey tiles, reminiscent of public toilets, have been laid on the peeling, moldy walla of the 19thcentury building. Only the guards move freely along the low-ceilinged corridors, lit cerily by florescent bulbs.

It is a gruesome world, where fresh air and light enter only when the heavy iron door is opened by a policeman with clanking keys to lct another detainee in or out. A strange smell permeates the heavy, hot air inside - disinfectant mixed with human secretions, and fresh whitewash covering up some of the mould. A hodgepodge of human beings has been locked into the cramped cells for all kinds of reasons, some of them for several days. There are young and old, secular and baredi, Arabs and Jews. Here and there, someonc has left a reminder of the basics of freedom in some painting on the corridor wall - a nude woman, a still-life showing a basket with fresh eggs, a glimpse of the lockup walls with barbed wire, beyond which a tree is growing, as if providing a wiodow to the real world.

When Supreme Court President Aharon Barak, Justice Minister Tzahi Hanegbi and Knesset Law Committee chairman Shaul Yahalom entered this closed world yesterday, it was sheer pandemonium,

Some 30 photographers and journalists, warmed up by a halfhour wait inside, shoved, pushed and shouted at each other, vying for a good angle. Behind the bars, the detainees screamed for a split-second of media attention.

"I haven't spoken to my children. I want to get out. I am innocent," should one man, "This place is like hell. We have no water. We get our last meal at 3 p.m. and then have to wait for breakfast the next day, another shouted.

"It's disgusting here," one man yelled through the bars. "We were 13 meo in this cell Imeant for 8], but they took them out for your visit. The cockroaches crawl all over us."

Members of the entourage went from cell to cell, examining the conditions. Overcrowding is rampant. Detainees sleep on blue mats on concrete double-decker beds. They share a primitive urinal and tap, hidden only by a plastic curtain inside the cell. Clothes are huog on striogs tied across the cells. Graffiti have not yet been washed off walls. Drugs are passed around freely. A diabetic complained that he bas not had a proper diet for four days.

The human misery and the stench were overpowering.

"A society is judged also by the standard of its lock-ups," Barak commented wheo the visitors finally returned to the clear eveoing air. "This facility is not fit for human beings. It must be tom down."

The level of violence in Israel is rising constantly and could lead to physical attacks on judges, Justice Minister Tzahi Hancgbi warned yesterday.

Hancebi was speaking during a visit to Petah Tikva Magistrate's Court, which was badly damaged on Monday when a pipe bomb went off there.

"We have reached a worrisome level of violence. It is increasing and threatens to engulf the entire legal system," Hanegbi said. "No one can know where it can lead to. The attack on courts could lead to actual physical attacks on the judges them-

However, he refused to comment on whether supporters of jailed Rabbi Uzi Meshularn were connected with the incident, saying police were still investigating.

"I came here to give support to the judges and to express my disgust with the incident," Hanegbi said. Supreme Court President Aharon Barak yesterday decried the bombing, saying he was surprised it had not been given greater coverage.

Israel halts anti-Iran broadcasts

Israel said yesterday it had hali- attacks against Iran. ed Persian-language broadcasts from an Israeli satellite that incited violence against Iran's oew govemment.

Isracli officials said they slopped the broadcasts in part as a gesture to new Iranian President Mohammed Khatami, who is regarded as a moderate.

Israel has no relations with Iran, which does not recognize Israel's right to exist.

The broadcasts contained incitement and anti-Iranian speeches of the worst sort you can imagine," Foreign Ministry spokesman Aviv Shir-On said.

He added that the radio and television broadcasts, transmitted by Israeli-licensed companies via the AMOS satellite, contained "incitement to violence."

"There was no incitcment against Israel," he said. "It was strictly an internal Iranian affair. We understood that this is one of the opposition organizations of the mujahideen [fighters] Operating from somewhere in Europe," Shir-On said.

The mujahideen want to topple Tehran's Islamic government and have launched occasional military

Those private companies used Israeli satellites, [and] the suspicion was the Iranians would think this was an Israeli operation or a government operation, which was, of course, not the case," said one Israeli official who asked not to be identified.

"It is wrong, principally, and [the broadcasts] would not help our relations with Iran, even if they are not that good," he said.

Khatami won a landslide election victory in May, after promising to introduce social reforms and to increase personal freedoms.

Israel at the time issued a statement saying it hoped Khatami would "open a new page" in Jewish-Iranian relations.

Khatami opposes the peace process, but has said he will not take any action to disrupt it.

Israel accuses Tehran of developing nuclear and other non-conventional weapons and of arming Hizbullah.

Israel also says Iran is responsible for the fate of missing airman Ron Arad, whose bomber was shot down over Lebanon in 1986. Tehran denies any knowledge of (Reuters) his whereabours.
